Follow up on Research Cases

During the Society's December meeting, various research brick walls were discussed, and the information/suggestions from those discussions are given below:

Case #1: Burial location of Charles Frederick Rittermeyer and his wife, Lelia Brown Rittermeyer.

According to St. Clair County Missouri Death Certificate #33951: Charles Frederick Rittermeyer died Sep. 30, 1913 in Monegaw Springs, St. Clair Co., MO, and was buried in the Mt. Zion Cemetery, also located in Monegaw Springs, MO.

According to Jackson County Missouri Death Certificate #24515: Lelia Brown Rittermeyer died Aug. 25, 1927 in Kansas City, MO, and place of burial, cremation, or removal was to Butler, MO. It is noted that "Rockville," MO was first listed, was marked through, and Butler inserted.

A Society member confirms that the Rittermeyer's are not listed in the newest edition of the St. Clair County Cemetery Directory. He additionally reports that the Mt. Zion Church is now closed. He will also contact the cemetery regarding the burials and will inquire about the church records from the Mt. Zion Church. He reports that there are several older stones in the back of the cemetery and the inscriptions cannot now be read. An inquiry to Oak Hill Cemetery in Butler, MO showed that there are no lot purchases or burials for that surname.

Suggestions are that (1) follow-up be conducted regarding Mt. Zion Church records by the Society member and (2) a search be made for obituaries in newspapers nearby to Monegaw Springs: Osceola, Rockville, Rich Hill, and Butler. Contact both the Butler and Osceola libraries regarding how to obtain obituary searches in their areas.

Case #2: The maiden name of Laticia/Leticia, wife of Jacob Hicks. According to the 1850 Wayne Co, KY Federal Census, Laticia was born about 1791 in NC, and Jacob was born about 1781 in VA. Their first child, John Hicks, was born about 1806 in Wayne Co, KY.

From the approximate ages of Jacob and Laticia and the approximate birth year of their son, John Hicks, it can be estimated that the marriage occurred in approximately 1805, give or take a couple of years, and possibly in Wayne Co, KY. Wayne Co was formed from Pulaski and Cumberland counties in 1801.

Suggestions are that (1) all available marriage indexes be reviewed for the marriage; e.g., Kentucky Marriages, 1797-1865 by C. Glenn Cliff, etc. – check www.worldcat.org for copies in a nearby library; [Once in a while a marriage is abstracted in a finding aid but the actual paper copy of it can no longer be found.] (2) contact the Wayne Co Courthouse regarding early county marriages; (3) check the early history books of Wayne Co, for family biographical information; (4) contact the Wayne Co historical and genealogical society for research assistance; and (5) research the land records for information regarding Jacob Hicks' first purchase in Wayne Co and possible land information if his wife's father also lived in Wayne Co and left land to her and Jacob.

Case #3: Looking for the parents of Nancy Ann Douglass (b. about 1867) who married James Hart in Coffee Co, TN. Nancy's mother died when she was about 2 years old; and she was raised by her older sister, Melissa, and a nanny. How can it be proved that a family located in the 1870 Coffee Co, TN Census is the correct family?

The 1870 Coffee Co, TN census shows a Park Douglass family, no wife, and 6 children. Melissa, 14, is the oldest child; and 3-yr-old Nancy is the youngest.

Suggestions are that (1) the Coffee Co, TN court be contacted to obtain a copy of any will and/or probate file for Park Douglass which would list his legal heirs; (2) a copy of an early Coffee Co history be searched for a family bio; and (3) queries be posted on both GenForum and rootsweb.com surname and location message boards.

Subject: RE: Steve Smith's article Kincaid

Dear Sirs: Would you please inform Steve Smith of Georgia that his article on the Kincaid's of Claiborne County, TN, has been very useful to me. Though I can only use a little bit of the information for my project, it has been a great help. One notation I'd found said the Kincaid family went to MO. and all died of cholera.

At the present time I am compiling "Confederate History Compendium of Tennessee" for the TN Division, United Daughters of the Confederacy, as one of our Sesquicentennial projects.

Each county in TN will have about 10 pages of information, though some less and some more. I have 15 pages for Claiborne County which includes a brief sketch of the Kincaid-Longmire-Ausmus-Welch House, the home of John Kincaid III, in Speedwell, TN.

This article enabled me to add a few additional comments about the original owner of the house.

You have a great site. Thanks.

Particulars of the Pursuit and Shooting.

"Had you heard that Sheriff Hill had shot a man?" asked Officer Prewitt of a MAIL reporter this morning.

It was the first intimation received and the reporter hurried out in quest of the sheriff. He was found at the law office of Messrs. Scott & Hoss and was perfectly willing to give a full statement of the affair.

To fully explain the causes which led to the shooting it is well to go back to an article published in the MAIL about two weeks since. A black horse had been turned into an oat field near Sandstone belonging to E. W. Koon, and had been taken up and posted by that man. After it was posted, some one took the horse and attempted to ride it away, but in the dark ran into a barbed wire fence and cut the animal so badly that he could not travel. In this emergency the rider turned him loose in a pasture near Milo. Koon heard of the animal and took it back to his home.

Last week Koon wrote to Sheriff Hill that some one was again trying to steal the horse, and he could prove that the man was Robert Roundtree, his brother-in-law. Mr. Hill was not well enough to visit Sandstone, and did not go in answer to the letter.

"This morning," said the Sheriff, "Koon came to town and swore out a warrant before Justice McBride at about 3 o'clock. He then came after me and I went down with him to the house of Tom Wallace. There I waited a short time for Jerry Crowley, of this city, who was going direct to Roundtree's house. I had not eaten my breakfast before leaving Nevada and thought I would eat with Mr. Wallace.

"Yesterday, (Sunday) Roundtree went to Koon's house and engaged in a quarrel with him. He had previously made threats of burning Koon's house and of injuring him in other ways. To prevent the consummation of his purposes the neighbors had been guarding Koon's house. The horse had been hobbled with two chains in such a manner that he could not be taken away without breaking them off. The smaller chain was cut one night, but the larger one still remained. The Sunday's quarrel was the immediate cause of Koon's swearing out the warrant against Roundtree."

"While I was waiting at Mr. Wallace's, Mr. Shumaker, who had been guarding Koon's house through the night came over and said that Roundtree had saddled his horse and was doubtless getting ready to run away. Roundtree's house was only a quarter of a mile away, and looking in that direction he was seen leading his horse across the road. A woman was following him. I got my horse as quickly as possible and rode after him. When I reached the place, he had gone, but there were several men collected at Campbell's blacksmith shop. Campbell is Roundtree's father-in-law. I enquired the direction the man had taken and they pointed it out to me. I followed the horse's tracks through a skirt of timber, and as soon as I got out on the prairie, I saw Roundtree some distance away riding in a trot. A woman was riding behind him.

"I rode after him, and could see that he turned and looked at me. When close to him, I asked: 'Is your name Roundtree?' He replied that it was. Then I said,

'I want you!'

'What for?' he asked, and at that moment grasped the handle of a heavy revolver which was stuck under the waistband of his pants in front.

'Throw up your hands!' I called to him, but instead of doing so he attempted to jerk his revolver out. He pulled it nearly out and the hammer caught on his vest. I was then sitting on my horse within six or eight feet of him, but had not touched my pistol until he had partially drawn his weapon. When I drew my revolver he had gotten his out, and we were so close that I knew one of us must be shot. I was afraid of killing the woman, and sighted a little in front of him. The first time I missed, and the woman screamed and jumping down off the horse ran away. My revolver was a self-cocker while Roundtree was compelled to raise the hammer of his weapon. When I fired the first time his horse commenced shying from me, and Roundtree turned in the saddle to aim at me. His pistol was extended toward me and I think he shot, but I was too much excited to say positively.

When the woman jumped, I kept firing until Roundtree fell from his horse.

I think the last shot struck him in the back of the head, but I am not certain. I thought then I had fired but three shots, but afterward found that four chambers of my revolver were empty. Roundtree's weapon, I think was a navy revolver.

"When the man fell I did not stop to examine him, but rode away as rapidly as possible for help. I went to two or three houses before finding anyone at home, but finally found some men and then sent a physician from Milo.

"I suppose it was almost eight o'clock when the shooting occurred. It took place about one-fourth mile south of Sandstone. When I first saw him on the prairie he was about three hundred yards away, but when I was within a hundred yards of him he stopped and waited for me to come up. I suppose the woman who was with Roundtree was his wife, but I do not know. I never saw Roundtree before. I was told that he came to Sandstone last spring. Koon said he was 38 years old. He was a man of average size, with long sandy whiskers."

Sheriff Hill seemed very much troubled by the affray, but there is not a man in Vernon county who does not know that he would never have drawn a weapon unless the emergency compelled him. It was either his blood or that of the man for whose arrest he carried a warrant. It was his duty as an officer to capture Roundtree, and he was resolved not to submit to arrest.

The revolver which Sheriff Hill used was that with which John Keating was killed by Jesse Chaney.

Doctors H. B. Harris and C. A. Rockwood were sent to the scene of the killing soon after Sheriff Hill's arrival in the city.

In conversation with Uncle Jimmy Bridgford a MAIL reporter learned that Roundtree was the man who ran away with a buggy last fall from B. F. Bridgford's stable. He got possession of it under the pretext of buying it, and drove it to Jerico. Frank Bridgford followed him, and rather than come back to jail Roundtree borrowed the money and paid for the buggy.

The horse which was the origin of the difficulty, mysteriously appeared in Koon's oat-field, and as yet no trace has been found of his owner. He was evidently stolen and for some purpose the thief left him there.

A MAIL reporter saw Jerry Crowley at noon. He had just returned from Sandstone where he had gone to buy some cattle from Roundtree. Mr. Crowley said that Roundtree was dead, but learned nothing more of the shooting than related by Sheriff Hill. The body was lying on the prairie where he had fallen, but a shade had been built over it and it was being watched by a number of persons. Mr. Crowley did not go out to the scene of the killing.
